

Pablo Rodriguez-Bilella

Pablo is an evaluator and consulting sociologist from Argentina, with more than 20 years of progressively responsible positions in applied and academic social sciences: evaluation, planning, community participation, and programme management. He has a Ph.D. from Sussex University (United Kingdom) and he is a member of the CONICET -Argentine Research Council- as well as professor of Anthropology at Universidad Nacional de San Juan (Argentina). He has been a member of the working group that developed the Evaluation Standards for Latin America and he is actually involved in a research program about Collaborative Approaches in Evaluation in Latin America and the Caribbean.

Pablo is nowadays a Board Member of IDEAS, the International Development Evaluation Association. He has been Board Member of the Latin American Evaluation Network (ReLAC), the International Organization for Cooperation in Evaluation (IOCE) and the EvalPartners initiative. He has written about the realities of the Voluntary Organizations for Professional Evaluation (VOPEs) as well as issues of evaluation for learning. He is experienced in bridging evaluation research and policy by interdisciplinary work, and interested in linking issues of relevance and applicability with high standards of evaluation quality. Since 2011 has been blogging about issues of Evaluation, Development, and Complexity in his blog Al Borde del Caos.
